Eversole-Hall House Gets Makeover

The Readington Museums thanks Hunterdon Paint for nominating the Eversole-Hall House to participate in the Benjamin Moore & Company's Your Mainstreet Matters program. Its generous donation was used to repair and paint weather damage to the Eversole Hall House located on Main Street in Whitehouse Station, NJ. This pre-Revolutionary museum site was first renovated by community volunteers, and opened as a museum in 1991. The house is currently used to interpret life in the 1830s.

“I Want to Stay in the 1700s”—First Graders Visit

Vrouw Bouman demonstrates how to make a whirly gig.

First graders from Readington Township visited the Bouman-Stickney Farmstead early this spring. Huddled in their winter jackets and boots, they tramped up the walk onto the patio where Time Travel Guide and history intern Barbara Krasner explained the origins of the house, its materials, the corncrib, and the barn. She then took them back into time, brought them into the house, and introduced them to Vrouw Bouman (Museums’ Program Director, Margaret Smith). Vrouw Bouman demonstrated how she makes her stew. She asked the children to smell her fresh herbs like basil and oregano and explained how she makes toothpaste with ashes and mint. She escorted the children upstairs and passed out tufts of sheep’s wool, showing how she cards the wool. As they practiced, Time Travel Guide read them a picture book, When I Was Built, by Jennifer Thermes. The highlight for the first graders, however, was making whirly gigs with Vrouw Bouman. After a mid-morning snack of cookies (thank you, Betty Ann Fort!) and apple juice, the children, now wearing their whirly-gigs around their necks, headed back to their horseless carriage (bus). One student remarked, “I don’t want to go back to 2015. I want to stay here!”

Fifth Graders at the Farmstead

During the week of April 27, more than 200 fifth graders from Holland Brook School arrived in their big yellow horseless carriages at the Bouman-Stickney Farmstead for two hours of immersion in the eighteenth century. The transformation began with the boys donning period-appropriate shirts and the girls, petticoats, short gowns, and aprons.

Four stations stood ready for them. Mistress Fort showed them different types of lanterns and taught them how to dip candles with her “Dip, drip, go” refrain. Then depending on the day, they either visited the print shop or spent time at the spinning wheel. Out at the barn, they joined the Continental Army and learned some basic soldier skills. In the house, they visited with Vrouw Bouman and learned what it takes to run a farm.

These activities engage the children in age-appropriate hands-on tasks that can enhance classroom experiences. They’re not just learning history. They’re learning science, math, ethics, and courtesy.

Summer Lecture Series Sizzles

This summer the Readington Museums resume our popular lecture series. All programs take place at the Bouman-Stickney Farmstead Barn in Stanton on Friday evenings from 7:00 pm – 8:30 pm. Refreshments are served.

“Remembering Dorothy: An Oral History Retrospective”

Our history intern, Barbara Krasner, will present the results of our “Remembering Dorothy” oral history program within the context of Broadway life on June 26. Dorothy, of course, is Broadway actress Dorothy Stickney, former owner of the farmstead.

Barbara is a candidate for the M.A. in History at William Paterson University. Her specialties are oral history and twentieth-century America.

“The History and Archaeology of Rowlands Mills, a Nineteenth-Century Roadside Village Beside the South Branch”

In particular, Dr. Hunter will talk about Rowlands Mills and the fascinating use of daybooks of a Ewing blacksmith shop.

Dr. Hunter received his B.A. in Archaeology and Geography from Birmingham University (U.K.), an M.A. in Archaeological Science from Bradford University (U.K.), and Ph.D. in Geography from Rutgers University.
